The Conditions of Love , Dale M. Kushner Although we may harbor desires to restore some of our youth, few of us desire to return to adolescence. Adolescence is one of the only diseases that age can cure. Starting with the titular denial of unconditional love, Dale Kushner, through the voice of Eunice, a preternaturally wise adolescent, reconditions love as intermittent drama constantly redefined by struggles with loss, guilt, and acceptance. Intimately navigable and eidetic as a pirate's map ...

The Conditions of Love by Dale Kushner. Reviewed By Kevin O'Kelly. August 20th, 2013. It's 1953 in small town Illinois. Our narrator, Eunice, is the daughter of a single mother, a hard enough situation made even worse by the fact her mother doesn't want to be a mother: My mother was dead set against me calling her Ma. When the offending word passed my lips, she pinched my chin and ...

The Conditions of Love resonates with the experiences and feelings of real life. In that regard, I felt that every character in the story was like someone I have personally known in my own life. It is a book that, after turning the final page, left me with a feeling of being fully and wonderfully satisfied at the finish.--D.F.

The Conditions of Love is the debut novel of Dale M. Kushner, a poet and writer in Wisconsin. It moves slowly and gingerly during its opening section when Eunice is a preteen, and it might easily be viewed at the start as a coming-of-age book for a younger set of readers. But by the end of that section, when facts-of-life shocks begin to strike, it turns into a moving, at times jolting, saga ...
